Making Contact

By Helen Drake

East Finchley Neighbourhood Contact (Contact) has received a cheque for £600 from the East Finchley Open group of artists and craftspeople, raised at their recent Winter Arts Fair.

Sian Jones, Co-ordinator of Contact, said, "This donation is crucial as our core funding doesn't cover all our services and it is difficult to find anyone willing to fund existing services."

Contact, set up in 1985 to help the vulnerable and isolated, offers a range of services to mainly elderly or disabled people living in East Finchley. Clients can receive gardening assistance; have volunteer help with transport, odd jobs and form filling; have a regular visitor; and access other voluntary or statutory services and financial benefits. When funds allow, Contact organises regular outings for the elderly and housebound. Their popular shopping bus runs twice a week for people unable to carry their shopping on public transport. It is Contact's most costly service.

The core funding from Barnet Council only pays the wages for the key workers for a limited number of hours a week. A small amount of additional funding from the Pension Service has enabled Contact to expand its services to other parts of Finchley and provide additional support to the most vulnerable.

Most other services offered rely on volunteers. Contact hopes to recruit a cook (paid/ or volunteer) for the Traditional Lunch Club held every Tuesday. If you are a good home cook and get on well with people, Sian would like to hear from you. For more information about Contact or to make a donation phone 020 8444 1162 or e-mail efncontact@dsl.pipex.com

No ordinary prince

By Hamasseh Mostafazadeh-Asl

The Ordinary Prince is a powerful play that was given a performance to match at the Finchley Youth Theatre. The play strives to break down common preconceptions of teenage pregnancy and addresses the relationships between parents and children.

Author Clifford Oliver tells the story of a 14-year-old boy, Adam, who struggles to understand the reasons why his biological father left him when he was a baby. It is a sad irony, therefore, that by the end of the play Adam follows in his father's footsteps by leaving his girlfriend, Carley, and their unborn baby.

The play draws attention to the important role young men play as fathers and the heavy burden of responsibility placed on their shoulders, which often proves to be unbearable.

The emotional hardships of this story and the consequences of teenage pregnancy were wonderfully conveyed by the enthusiastic, youthful cast.

The young audience particularly sympathised with both of the central characters, Adam and Carley, played by Mark Lazar and Johannah Maria-Feinberg. The talents of Edmund Cox must also be commended; he provided comic relief in the smaller role of Tim, Adam's friend.

Clifford Oliver parallels this story with a fictional fairytale version of Adam's life, allowing the audience to compare the harsh reality of Adam's situation with the fairytale-like expectations one might have of it. This opens up many questions regarding teenage pregnancy, often leaving the audience to think and answer them for themselves.

The Ordinary Prince will be returning to the Finchley Youth Theatre in High Road next year. I urge you to go and see it, not only to support the formidable acting talents of our local community, but also to engage all family members in thinking about the issues around teenage pregnancy and in seeing things from a young person's perspective.

Blackmail in the family

By Betti Blatman

Incognito Theatre in Friern Barnet recently presented an outstanding production of A Small Family Business by Alan Ayckbourn.

This blistering comedy is nonetheless a black morality play and won the London Evening Standard Drama Award for best play of 1987.

When Jack, honest and upright, takes over as managing director of the family furniture business, he expects to find scope for improving efficiency, but his managerial skills are no match for the wholesale fraud, deceit and theft he uncovers both in the business and amongst his family.

Almost at once he has to succumb to blackmail, because of his daughter, and this is only the first of the moral compromises he will have to make.

The play was directed by David Longstaff and every member of the cast portrayed and performed their characters to the highest standard. Particularly excellent were Will Piper as Jack McCracken, Graham Boon as Ken Ayres and David Parsons as Benedict Hough.

Turn again, theatre-goers!

By Daphne Chamberlain

Did you take the family to a pantomime this Christmas? If so, how was your journey? Next year, why not just look behind you: at the Guild Players in Ballards Lane Methodist Church?

When I went to their matinee of Dick Whittington, the hall was packed with enthusiastic children and appreciative adults. "It's real traditional theatre, better than the Cambridge Footlights show," I heard a young man tell his girlfriend. Well, of course it would be. After all, the character called Sam Seaweed said he used to go to Holy Trinity School.

All the panto must-haves were there, from thigh-slapping Principal Boy to inoffensively naughty Dame. There was an interesting programme, too, giving facts about the real Dick Whittington, and explaining the vital factor needed for this kind of show: communication with the audience. The excellent cast certainly had that. They were supported by a lively mini-orchestra, who romped through the Lambeth Walk and several other songs and dances before finding their way to Amarillo.

The Guild Players have been around for 60 years, but the members are all ages. Most are from Finchley, but others are from Archway, Enfield, Muswell Hill, Crouch End and Tottenham, and they don't necessarily have any connection with the Methodist Church. They've had a healthy influx of new members recently, but more are always welcome.

Pantos are for Christmas, but there are other plays throughout the year. Watch out for details of their next production, planned for May. For further information, contact Betty Robertson on 020 8441 7696.
