Children in Need supports Noah's Ark Children's Hospice

By Diana Cormack

The Noah's Ark Children's Hospice was selected as one of only four charities in London to benefit from November's Children in Need appeal. The hospice's community outreach service provides life-limited youngsters and their families in north London and south Hertfordshire with vital support.

This includes delivering care sessions involving specialist play workers, access to the guidance of a social worker and a family support volunteer programme. The development of services that can help families in their own homes is a priority and a siblings' programme and the provision of a bank of trained respite carers are planned.

During Children in Need week the family support programme featured in several television news broadcasts. Last year, on its very first application, it received a grant to be spread over three years.

Expansion plans

The anticipated telethon funding comes at a significant time for one of the charity's long term aims, namely the ability to complement its community based support by offering families access to services within a hospice.

To this end they have recently tendered for a site and are finalising the legal processes. By the end of this year they hope to take possession of the land occupied by the Denis Bland Nature Reserve in Byng Road, Barnet.

Lorraine Feldman, press officer for Noah's Ark, told THE ARCHER: "It is incredible for us, just looking at where we are and where we've been. This will really make a difference to all our families."

Noah's Ark is selling Christmas cards and alternative presents and their funds are being helped by a charity performance of Pinocchio at the Chickenshed Theatre on 8 January. ## CPZ plans scrapped

He was told of the council's decision when he and a group of traders and residents met with council leader Mike Freer and cabinet member for environment and transport Councillor Andrew Harper on, of all days, Friday 13 November.

Councillor Harper said later: "The leader and I had a meeting with a cross section of traders and residents and the overwhelming consensus was to maintain the status quo. We're happy to go along with their views, as that, let's face it, is the point of consulting."

Downcast down south

However, the situation for residents in roads south of Fortis Green is not so clear. Many wanted the all-day CPZ around their homes to be rolled back to a 2pm-3pm restriction. This is not currently part of the council's plans and residents look likely to have to wait some time for a full consultation process.

The current 10.30am-6.30pm restrictions were introduced three years ago to deter visitors to The Institute from taking residents' parking spaces. Many say this has never been a major problem and a one-hour restriction to deter commuters is sufficient.

Council spending online

Barnet Council is set to publish all its spending of more than £500 online. Councillors have agreed that expenditure should be published quarterly in arrears on the council's website during the next financial year, allowing residents to see how their money is being spent.
