The Shooting Stars Theatre Company production of Twelfth Night on the lawn at Lauderdale House.

Twelfth Night at Lauderdale House

Review by Carey Miller

Even if we have had a pretty miserable August, there is nothing more fun, especially for families, than sitting on a damp blanket on a tea lawn under a darkening sky, and watching a very updated version of a Shakespeare play. This time it was Twelfth Night, produced and performed by the Shooting Stars Theatre Company in the grounds of beautiful Lauderdale House in Highgate.

This is a play of mistaken identity, love triangles, popular music, zest, fun and a great performance from all members of the cast. It was also much enjoyed by the audience, not one of whom, in spite of the damp and miserable weather, left before the end.

The most memorable performances were Malvolio, Olivia's uptight steward, plus Sir Toby Belch and his mate Sir Andrew Aguecheek. Belch, with cans of beer always stuffed in his pocket, repeatedly stole crisps and sweets from children and wine from the grown-ups who all thought it was hilarious, while Aguecheek, the classic buffoon, managed to spray champagne (or was it water?) over everybody, particularly me! In spite of all that, a thoroughly enjoyable evening with a young and talented cast. I certainly look forward to their next production!

The perils and pleasures of being a gay football fan

With the new football season under way, there couldn't be a better time for campaigner Darryl Telles to release his memoir We're Queer and We Should Be Here, charting his nearly 30-year journey from isolation to inclusion as an out and proud season ticket holder at Spurs.

It starts in Margaret Thatcher's Section 28 Britain when he and his friends had to get used to the constant abuse from fellow supporters around them. In 1989 he got involved with the Gay Football Supporters Network, which he describes as "a turning point in my life".

The stories he tells, some painful to read and some hilariously funny, illustrate how attitudes to LGBT people within football and society in general have changed over the years, although he notes that there is still a long way to go.

Darryl grew up in East Finchley as the son of Catholic, Goan parents who arrived in the 1960s from Kenya. He went to

A fan's life: Darryl Telles

Bishop Douglass School from 1975 to 1982 and now lives in Hove.

His book is published by Mereo at £12.99 and copies are available to buy now from Amazon and Waterstones.

Yoga for men: a life changing experience

By Diana Cormack

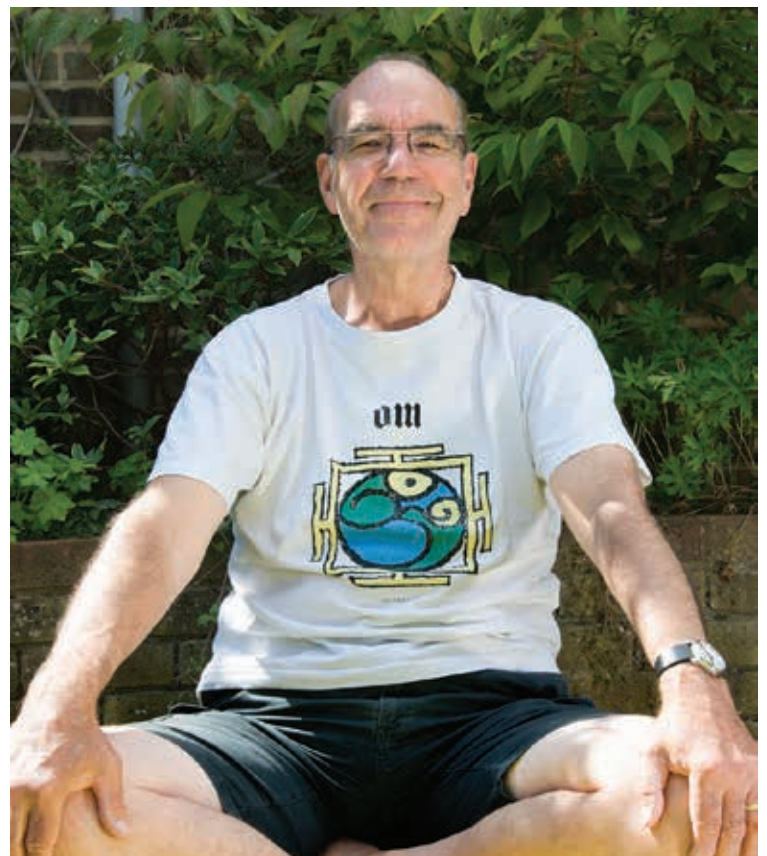

Did you know that of the two and a half million people in the UK who practise yoga, 85-90% are women? Strange to think that it was originally a male pursuit. However, more men are beginning to get involved.

For example, some football teams use it and former Man Utd and Wales player Ryan Giggs is a yoga devotee. When he launched his own DVD, complimentary comments were made about his fitness, flexibility and youthful looks, emphasising yoga's age-defying benefits. In the US, yoga is being marketed as a sports conditioning activity to encourage men to take it up.

Yoga instructor Ray Bussell, of Summerlee Avenue, N2, thinks it's time men enjoyed the benefits again, there being some differences in the way men and women approach and practise it. Architect Ray took up yoga 10 years ago and told The Archer that it has opened up a whole new world for him and brought such a change into his life. Earlier this year he started running Yoga for Men classes, having gained his British Wheel of Yoga qualifications on a part-time course in Brighton.

The original members of the group that Ray began in March are still with him, which says a lot. Sessions for beginners and intermediates take place in St Mary's Church Hall, Hendon Lane, N3 1TR from 8.15pm to 9.45pm on Wednesdays and Thursdays. For further details email rb@workeandbussell.com or call him on 07595 345 236.
